Good day all. I have been in sabbatical for some months now after my last assignment from God, serving as a scribe for the work ‘Healing dis-ease in the Mind of Christ’. This was a testing time of 9 months of giving birth to a work that, as the scribe, astounded me with the Knowledge of God that was brought through in this weary and at times very bleak world. Religions these days are a dime a dozen, and so-called religious men or women of God who believe they have the whole truth of God are even greater in number. But I will not say that I have the whole truth of God, or even a small part, for I am only that what I am inspired by God at any given moment. I am a so-called ‘babe in Christ’, an ordinary human being who is learning to be a better Christ-like version of myself, and it is this humility I hope will set me down as the lowest of the lowest, who can say “I honestly know nothing”, but who is willing to learn what I must unlearn in order to steer clear of the clutches of peril. I intend to keep these church services brief, so as not to send to sleep the already weary travellers of this world, and so without further ado, the subject for today’s service is ‘Live every day as if it were your last’. As human beings we often miss the beauty of simply “living in the day”, or “living in the moment”, too anxious to let our guard down, we keep on high alert to focus on the tomorrow’s, the what-ifs, the if I don’t focus and worry on this and on that then this terrible thing will happen in the future; and by not doing so it may cost me my life, or my fortune, or my whatever. This sets up a continual cycle of stress in our mind, fearful of the tomorrows, we never give our self time to just be, to simply be our best self for the day, for the moment we have been given by God in this very hour of our life. Wouldn’t it be wonderful to be free of all the worry, the stress, and to give it no power, to give the ‘body’ no power, to give the fear of loss no power, and to stand against this silent evil and say “No! I will live without fear on this day, in this hour, in this moment. I will serve as an instrument of God’s love on this day, in this hour, in this moment. I will surrender to God’s will on this day, in this hour, in this moment and stop the struggle to keep myself alive, to keep my possessions, to keep my whatever. And even if I am alive on this blessed earth for only a week, a day, an hour, I will give this week, that day, that hour to God wholly and fully and say “I am yours Father, wholly; without fear and worry. I trust you my Father. Take me in your Hand and cover me with your holy spirit and nurture and heal my spirit and cast off all doubt that separates me from You. Decide my fate for the tomorrows. I would rather live only a single day in perfect faith in You my Father than in a thousand years on earth constantly worrying about the tomorrows. Let it be known I will not give the energy of fear, the energy of darkness, the energy of the evil one any more power. Amen.” And so it is that as we cast off this yoke of sorrow, of confusion of the tomorrows, we settle into certainty of God who is beyond all time, who sees no value in our earthly life and possessions, but only in our complete faith in Him, in our wholly communion and “oneness” with Him. And then as we leave this world, which is bound to happen to each and every one, we will have sorted our spirit and proven to God that we see and hold nothing dearer to us than He. For whatever we focus on we worship. And if we focus on fearful things, we worship fear and the darkness of the evil one behind that fear, and this opens us to even greater ills and dis-ease of body, mind and spirit. Let us prepare our spirit for the point of departure. And each day as we surrender to God, by living every day as if it were our last, but with joy in our heart, and knowing this earthly life is but a flash of time, we banish all fear from our heart and feel the beauty and peace of God that was always there in our heart. Amen. And may you all be blessed in our Father’s love and grace.
